Artist Nelleke Demmer aims for whimsy and playfulness in her creations, which range from a Medieval mural with coordinating velvet-upholstered chairs, above, to a harlequin bureau of drawers, above right. deally the conversation would go something like this:

Friend: I love that table. You: Thanks, it's one-of-a-kind. Friend: Really?!

You: Yeah, I had it custom-made.

While the script sounds like a cheesy commercial, it actually reflects a growing and increasingly accessible option — one-of-a-kind, custom-made furniture for homeowners looking to create their own style.

During a recession, people put off buying new homes or remodeling existing ones. One of the upshots of this trend? Not a lot of new furniture being purchased. Given all of that, the idea of buying a custom piece may be pushed aside as wanton wastefulness.

But custom-made furniture is hardly a monolithic behemoth to be dismissed with such finality. Local designers and artists exemplify the incredible range of techniques, styles and functionality that fall under the term of "custom furniture." And, as designer Carol Lippert put it, for around the price of a designer handbag.

Art teacher from The Netherlands, Nelleke Demmer, is known mostly as an artist and muralist, designing large wall paintings for bathrooms and children's bedrooms. Before moving to Los Altos, Demmer began customizing furniture by painting chairs, chests and tables.

Her pieces are, in her words, "whimsical" and "playful," painted in vivid colors with creative patterns: a tartan cupboard, a harlequin bureau, chairs adorned with Dutch children.

Interior designer Carol Lippert fashioned a mirrored dining-room cabinet to fit the mood of a 1930s-era cottage.

Custom-made

"It's about giving a new life to old furniture," Demmer said. "I take a piece someone might not like and re-imagine it in a way that is personal to both me and the client."

She strips a piece completely, both of paint and hardware, and then, using stencils, sponges, tape, paints, small tools and whatever might strike her fancy, she recreates it to reflect the style of the owner, the artist and the item itself.

"Sometimes I make things whimsical because I like that style, but there are pieces that just need to be traditional," she said.

And if it doesn't work the first time?

"The great thing about paint," she said, "you can always paint over it and change the piece completely."

Brooke Grafstrom, an interior designer in Menlo Park, scours salvage yards and demolition or deconstruction sales for forgotten or neglected treasures.

Stacked in the corner of her garage are a half dozen shimmering blue chair seats.

"A couple of chairs in this set broke; they were throwing them all away," she said.

So, Grafstrom rescued them, repurposing and refashioning them into bulletin boards for her daughter's room or into a milk-can stool with a swivel seat for her son.

"My kids are fidgety," she said. "You have to think of how a piece will be used."

In the same spirit of repurposing, she's turning her grandmother's linen napkins into seat covers for the dining room.

Many of the napkins, for one reason or another, can no longer be used for their original purpose, she said. "But I could never get rid of them; they mean too much to me."

People often have things from their parents or grandparents they can't bear to part with: a chair, a blanket, a lamp. Grafstrom figures out a new way to use the item in the home that suits a client's aesthetic style as well as lifestyle.

The process is a bit like a puzzle, taking seemingly disparate objects or styles and combining them to come up with something useful, creative and wholly original.

"People want something that not a million people will have. They want something that reflects their own house and their own history," she said.

For more than 20 years, Carol Lippert, a

Palo Alto interior designer, has been designing custom furniture for private and commercial clients in the Bay Area.

"Custom furniture is a lot easier than people think for a designer to build," she said. "It works really well if you have a house where normal things don't seem to fit."

By "fit" Lippert means both physically and contextually. She designed a piece for a client's 1930s era cottage. The client wanted something that reflected a style contemporary with the home's construction, Lippert said.

"We wanted it to have the almost French feel of furniture built before World War II that fit the feel of the cottage," she said. "To get a real piece would have taken a lot of time and been really expensive, but I was able to design something that fit everything the client needs."

The creation, a cabinet piece with mirrors for the dining room, looks like a vintage piece, fits stylistically and was constructed with the physical space of the room in mind. A true antique, Lippert said, would have had to have been modified.

In an area where organic, local and sustainable foods continue to grow in popularity, Lippert and Grafstrom have noticed that using recycled and sustainable material is becoming a trend.

"More people are interested in repurposing and salvaging things because of the media emphasis on 'green," Grafstrom said.

Lippert said her clients appreciate knowing what exactly goes into a piece of furniture.

"We want to make sure the lumber we buy comes from a green source, that the finish isn't toxic. There are very different standards," she said.

By custom-designing a piece, she and the client have control down to every micro-level of the process.

The rise of stores such as Ikea has normalized the anonymity of furniture. Custom-made furniture is a way to buck that trend. The new dining room table might not be from the 1870s, but it will have an interesting back-story.

Demmer, Grafstrom and Lippert use materials and techniques to different ends. These differences only serve to reinforce the idea of custom furniture as a showcase for individual style and personality.

Positively Green

How two simple choices make a 'big whup'

by Iris Harrell

n my efforts to educate consumers about the positive effects of cumulative green choices, I occasionally have my own "aha" experience. In a recent interview I was innocently asked, "How can I really know if the choices I make daily are green?" Additionally, "What difference are these choices going to make in the long run, anyway?" Put plainly: "What is the big whup?"

I told the interviewer that all green choices are ultimately related to our health. Even if we don't think enough of ourselves to make healthy personal choices, we care enough about the people we love to influence them toward healthy choices. (Ever have a parent who threatened punishment for smoking with a lighted cigarette in hand?) Who of us isn't interested in our ly aware in this economy of what happens to our personal and community health when the negative effects of our unsustainable choices come home to roost. Fast food for breakfast, lunch and dinner with produce from God-knows-where has supersized too many of us and certainly affected our personal health negatively. Do any of us ever wonder if fast-food chains buy lettuce or beef locally? Could this seemingly insignificant fast-food choice affect our local farmers' economic conditions? What are the long-term consequences for our community when local farmers cannot earn a living wage?

My uncle in North Carolina was a farmer all his life, just like his father. Uncle Buddy also had a "day job" for decades working at the paper mill, which was over an hour's drive from his home. He did that because running a small farm on the rural land he owned was not enough to financially support his family. His primary crop was tobacco, because it had the highest dollar value return.

A devout Southern Baptist, Uncle Buddy did not smoke or believe in smoking (plus he was cured of his own urge to smoke when my grandfather caught him smoking as a young boy and made him keep smoking until he got sick). He wrestled with the ethical dilemma of raising an unhealthy product in order to be able to provide for his family all of his farming life.

Besides being harmful to inhale, tobacco also depletes the soil.

KITCHEN, BATH TRENDS ... Harrell Remodeling, Mountain View, will offer a workshop on "Trends: Kitchens, Baths & Beyond" on Saturday, May 27, from 6 to 8 p.m., at the Harrell Remodeling Design Center, 1954 Old Middlefield Way, Mountain View. Cost is $10 per household. For information, or to pre-register, call 650-230-2900. Somehow we have ended up with a great demand for a product that harms the health of those who use it and harms the soil where it has been grown. How did we get trapped in this unsustainable, unhealthy habit and keep it going for almost 400 years? Are we going to blame Sir Walter Raleigh who took it from the Native Americans and sold it to the British? Are we going to blame the Native American for growing it? Or will we step up to the plate and be accountable for our own seemingly unconscious decisions and reevaluate our daily choices?

We are now painfully aware of the negative effects of unsustainable choices that have become habits for ourselves and those we love. We are witnessing how interconnected our personal choices for food or other products grown in the soil are and the effects those decisions have on us and our community.

If we demanded locally, organically grown food from the supermarkets that's what would be available in stores. Our personal health Filoli is located at 86 Canada would be positively impacted as would local farmers' economic conditions. If we stopped buying tobacco today, that crop would no longer be grown and depleting our soils. These two examples demonstrate that our personal health is affected when we make simple daily decisions. Our community's health is affected by our support of local suppliers. And our planet's health is affected by whether or not we treat our finite amount of soil in an environmentally healthy, sustainable way.

The big green "whup" is that every choice we make has an impact on ourselves, our community and the Earth. I, for one, am going to be more conscious of my daily choices. I don't want people asking in 2050, "What in the world were our ancestors thinking?"
